Corpus Christi Army Depot 2020

MISSION

Corpus Christi Army Depot (CCAD) is the industry leader in repair and overhaul for helicopters, engines, and components for Army aviation assets. They return rotary wing aircraft and components to government organizations in top quality with the lowest cost and shortest return time possible. CCAD is the largest rotary wing repair facility in the Department of Defense (DoD) and supports multiple government agencies.

TENANT COMMANDS

CCAD is government-operated but funded by revenue obtained by competing for business. Competition includes projects and programs from the private and government sectors. The CCAD team is cost-conscious at all levels as they innovate ways to increase efficiency and process improvement. CCAD is able to operate on helicopters for all branches of the Department of Defense, Department of Homeland Security - Customs and Border Patrol, and foreign nations. In addition to repair, the civilian workforce at CCAD can take aging or damaged aircraft and transform them into new, fully-modernized versions with the newest capabilities and technologies to handle any obstacle on the battlefield. Every aircraft and component must pass rigorous standards to be released. CCAD works on UH-60 Black Hawks, CH-47 Chinooks, AH-64 Apaches, OH-58 Kiowas and the Air Force HH-60 Pave Hawks.

OUTLOOK

Aircraft production accounts for 36% of CCAD's revenue with component production accounting for 63%. Components include engines, transmissions, and rotor blades. The City of Corpus Christi recently received a DEAAG grant for $919 thousand to put towards upgrades at CCAD. CCAD has a footprint reduction initiative that saved over $500,000 this fiscal year. CCAD continues to hold contracts with Boeing Company, General Electric Aircraft Engines, Honeywell International Corporation, and Sikorsky Aircraft Corporation.
